Jeff and Jane Uecker House, 2017

Ken Dahlin

With a prow inspired by Teater's Knoll this 3,500 square foot home is a contemporary interpretation of Wright's Usonian designs based on a triangular unit grid system and continuous flowing interior spaces. The stone and wood home features many built-ins and radiant floor heating in a modern functional plan. An in-ground pool on a beautiful 100-acre rural site completes the composition.

Harold and Janet Schulz House, 1952

John Bloodgood Schuster

The design of this cedar and glass house is a creative solution to the constraints the architect faced: a narrow 60-foot lot and the need to fit into the footprint of a previous cottage. With three levels and a wrap-around balcony this lakeside cottage has remained basically unchanged except for a remodeled lower level bathroom.

Max and Bertha Alpert House, 1958

John Bloodgood Schuster

At 1,830 square feet, this single-story two-bedroom home is a smaller example of Schuster's characteristic mid-century modern style. With original bright interior colors, and window walls facing the expansive rear yard, this home is a good example of how an affordable Schuster can fit today's lifestyle.

Walter and Jean Huchthausen House, 1959

John Bloodgood Schuster

Overlooking a small pond, this 3,400 square foot 2-story home by John Bloodgood Schuster takes full advantage of its rural site and is surrounded by extensive mature landscaping and flower beds. The limestone and pecky cypress home presents Schuster at his best, along with a stylistic nod to his employer and associate Russell Barr Williamson.

Dr. John and Anna Meany House, 1912

Earl F. Miller

Located within the soon-to-be National Register-listed, Lincoln Boulevard Historic District, this four-bedroom, Prairie School house consists of nearly 2,500 square feet. It was designed by Earl F. Miller, a Chicago School-trained, residential and commercial architect. While maintaining its original integrity, the home's current owners have completed a small number of renovations in order to make it their own.

William and Nancy Webster House, 1970 (exterior only)

John Bloodgood Schuster

The Websters selected Schuster to design their home because of his skill in siting a home to capture multiple views. Their lot on the East Twin River, next to the Schwartz House, is filled with natural beauty. The bi-level home of cedar and mahogany that Schuster designed for them does just that.

Bernard and Fern Schwartz House, 1939

Frank Lloyd Wright

Wright redesigned his 1938 LIFE magazine 'dream' house project for Bernard and Fern Schwarz, creating the masterpiece known as Still Bend. The two-story brick and cypress home features radiant heating, a Cherokee-red concrete slab foundation and large expanses of glass.
